

ORGANZINE, ȳr'gan-zēn (from It. organzino, organzine). A silk thread used chiefly for warp in silk weaving. It is formed by the union of two or more single threads, which are twisted separately in the same direction and are then doubled and retwisted in the opposite direction. See SILK.